metal, the color and definitely the restaurant. Every Charlottean has an affinity for this historic home near South End where Carson McCullers began work on The Heart is a Lonely Hunter. Even though the location has rendered the kiss of death to every restaurant that's attempted to make this spot home. Perhaps this time Copper has broken the spell with its incongruous marriage of Southern heritage on the outside and modern Indian cuisine on the inside.

Rich reds dominate the appropriately outfitted rooms named The Polo Room and The Turban Room while the bar glimmers temptingly with jewel-toned squares of color. Owner Pannu Singh's menu divides dishes into the traditional (delivering the expected tandoori and curry dishes), the modern (with unexpected twists on lamb and seafood dishes), and the gourmands (which takes diners into the realm of the truly dazzling in Indian cuisine). Every dish is lovingly presented with a flourish on a stark white china background. Don't forget the naan--this traditional Indian bread ensures you'll get every last drop. -- Lesa Kastanas
